Let the Little Children Come to BlackAndWhite Foundation, and do not hinder them.

Children are the purest gift, cherished by God and deserving of every opportunity to thrive. At BlackAndWhite Foundation, we carry this truth in our hearts as we work to deliver wheelchairs to children with disabilities in Kenya.

But sometimes, our mission is interrupted. Political demonstrations have delayed our journey, and it feels like tear drops falling when we cannot reach the little angels who wait in hope.

We've seen them limping to school, to church, to the river to fetch water, or gathering firewood to help prepare meals. Some must stop two or three times just to rest before reaching home. Their strength humbles us. Their resilience moves us.

It takes us back to our Christian school days, where we learned of Jesus saying, "Let the little children come to me." Today, we echo that call: "Let the little children come to BlackAndWhite Foundation, and do not hinder them."

With your support, we can reach them. We can lift them. We can show their families that they are not alone.

Our next children's wheelchair is destined for Daisy Special School in Kakamega. It will be a blessing, but one wheelchair is not enough. Many more children are waiting.

To every donor with a generous heart: your gift is a blessing beyond measure. We may not know how to repay you, but we offer the deepest words we know. Asante Sana. Thank you.

Together, let's roll hope forward.
